DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The building occupied by the office of the Catholic Cemeteries of the Archdiocese of Washington is a two and a half story stuccoed brick early twentieth century Colonial Revival house on the east side of Washington Street south of St. Aloysius Catholic Church, in Leonardtown, Maryland.

The site includes a main house with a carriage house adjoining, connected by a stuccoed arcade. A second house, dating from about 1875, is located about 50 feet northeast of the main house.

The main structure is gambrel roofed with hips at the north and south ends. The west facade is three bays wide with a central entry porch supported on stop fluted columns with stop fluted pilasters at the wall. The porch has a modillion cornice and arcaded frieze. Three pedimented dormers with arched windows break the roof over each bay. The first floor bays are 12/12 sliding sash with key-stoned lintels set within blind arches. The second floor fenestration is symmetrical with paired casement windows in the center bay flanked by groups of three casement windows in the other bays. These windows also have keystoned lintels. A modillion cornice extends across the front elevation and a belt course separates the first and second floors on the front and side elevations.

The entrance is recessed within an arched niche with a paneled soffit. The entry has a leaded fan and side lights.

The rear elevation has a one-story brick ~~ext~~ extension probably contemporary with the main section. A smaller frame addition is on the roof of this extension with a brick chimney breaking through the second floor extension. In the main block is a gable roofed dormer with a Palladian window. On either side and adjoining this dormer are two flat roofed frame dormers, probably of a later date.

The carriage house is now a garage and contains several rooms open to the east, each completely covered in patterned pressed metal.

The adjoining house dating from approximately 1875, is a two-story frame house with one-story shed roofed porch on the west and south sides. The main section has two bays and a projecting two story section at the southeast corner. The exterior is weatherboarded and the roof has a finial at the peak of each gable.
